Rabbits And Easter

By Lisa Bates

At this time of year, parents often are bombarded by requests from children for a gift for Easter. Children often want a baby bunny or chick, which are in plentiful supply in both pet stores and newspaper ads. The baby bunnies and chicks look so cute and fuzzy. What a wonderful gift! How easy to care for!

But after a month or two of attention, the child's interest often wanders. And it is about this time that the cute little baby bunny has grown into a teenage rabbit. A bunny begins to feel the effects of those teenage hormones at about three months old. This means spraying, biting, scratching, and generally unfriendly behavior on the part of the bunny. Novice rabbit owners generally begin to discover that caring for a rabbit is far more work than anticipated.

And so it is, around the beginning of June, shelters and rescues see an influx of these unaltered teenage rabbits which have been abandoned, dumped, or "set free." To prevent such tragic overpopulation of our shelters, people should be aware of the pros and cons of rabbit ownership.

Rabbits can make wonderful companion animals. Rabbits are easily litterbox trained, learn their name, and adapt to human living patterns quite easily. Rabbits should be kept indoors, in a large cage or contained area, with a litter box filled with newspaper-based litter, water, and as much grass hay as they want. Fresh vegetables should be offered at least once per day. Manufactured rabbit pellets should be given in limited quantities, about one quarter of a cup of a low-fat, high-fiber pellet per rabbit per day. Some larger rabbits may require more, and smaller rabbits may require less.

A common misconception of rabbit care is that these creatures belong in a cage outdoors. While wild rabbits do live outdoors, they have large burrows to hide in from predators and from inclement weather. A rabbit housed in an outdoor hutch has no place to hide from a predator, nor do they have a cool place to hide from summer heat. Predators include coyotes, hawks, raccoons, cats, dogs, bobcats, etc. Rabbits can die from the terror of the proximity of a predator, even if the rabbit is enclosed in a cage.

Peg Phillips Bucci Leaves A Rich Legacy With A Happy Ending

The late Peg Phillips Bucci was an animal lover, long-time Dana Point resident and co-founder of the Animal Rescue Foundation.

Bucci was a film and television writer with major credits which include "Lassie," "National Velvet," "Days of Our Lives," "The Donna Reed Show," and "My Three Sons."

She left behind her faithful friend, Cheeky, a 12-year-old Jack Russell Terrier. The efforts of several people succeeded in finding Cheeky a wonderful new home with the Rice family. Cheeky is adjusting well to life with two new feline friends and is adored by her new family.

Another, and possibly more important, reason to avoid housing rabbits outdoors is the health risks. Fly strike, West Nile virus, and myxomatosis are fatal diseases caused by flies and mosquitoes, with no treatment or vaccine available.

Rabbits have long been associated with Easter, and have often been labeled as ideal pets for children. This is not necessarily true. Rabbits are prey animals, and as such, they spend their entire lives trying not to be eaten. When people approach a rabbit, the rabbit's only thought is "will they eat me?" Loud noises, quick movements, and being picked up generally causes fear in rabbits, and can cause panic. If they feel threatened, rabbits will run, scratch, or bite to protect themselves. Children who are thoughtful, and understand the rabbit's fears make the best caregivers.

Another common misconception is that rabbits do not need to be spayed or neutered, especially if they live alone. All companion rabbits should be spayed or neutered for health and longevity reasons. An altered rabbit, housed indoors, can live seven to ten years, and often longer. Unaltered rabbits are at high risk for developing reproductive cancer, and tend to be more high-strung and territorial. Rabbits should also be taken to the vet at least once per year for a "well bunny" checkup.

Following on the heels of the last misconception is the common mistake that rabbits should be housed alone. Domestic rabbits' wild cousins live in large groups, or "warrens," with a complex hierarchy of relationships. Companion rabbits are very social creatures as well, and generally enjoy fellow rabbit companionship. Prior to introducing two (or more) rabbits, all rabbits involved should be spayed or neutered, checked by a rabbit-savvy vet, and introduced by an experienced rabbit "bonding" person. Like humans, not all rabbits get along with each other. Rabbits that are successfully bonded will groom each other, play together, and sleep side-by-side.

Sharing a home with a rabbit companion can be time-consuming. Rabbits are a high-maintenance pet. Twice daily feedings, litter box cleaning, grooming, and vet care all adds up. However, spending an hour or two daily with a bunny can make it all worth while. These generous, selfless, complex creatures provide plenty of entertainment, whether it's playing with toys, dancing about the room, or settling in for a grooming and petting session with their favorite human. Rabbits make wonderful companions for apartment renters, people who are allergic to cats or dogs, or people who are looking for a quiet, gentle companion to just hang out with. Visit the rabbitat at our shelter for more information on how to care for these wonderfully unique creatures.

Meet Mark Gilliland, Shelter Director

By Christel Hall

If you haven't stopped by the Animal Shelter in the last two months, this is your personal invitation to come by and visit Richard 'Rick' Gilliland, the new Shelter Director. Hired in December to run the San Clemente – Dana Point Animal Shelter, Rick wants you to know that he has an open door policy for all area residents, pet owners, Shelter volunteers and office staff.

"The Shelter was without a permanent director for over a year," says Gilliland. "In the short term, I feel it's important for me to do a lot of listening and work on resolving a year's worth of issues for all three areas of shelter management, namely animal care, enforcement, and office administration. I'm eager to use my experience in people relationships and team development to work with our great volunteers and staff, and our residents, to get everyone moving in the same direction, focused on the same objectives."

Gilliland's reference to people relationships and team management points to his 28 years in various law enforcement management positions, most recently as lieutenant for the Whittier Police Department. His experience includes teaching law enforcement classes at the Rio Hondo College Police Academy, customer service problem resolution, working with volunteers, a K-9 unit and a mounted patrol equestrian unit, as well as developing a team of volunteer pastors and ministers to service the police and the community.

San Clemente City Manager George Scarborough said upon hiring Gilliland, "Richard brings to the table the experience in human resources and budget management, planning and scheduling that is needed in this position."

Commenting further on short-term objectives, Gilliland said, "We want to get fully staffed and replace a couple of vacancies in the next month or two, then focus on the individual needs of each of the three operational areas. We're also putting together two committees, a shelter operations committee, and an animal control committee, to plan and develop ideas for future shelter development."

Gilliland works very closely with Roberta Gorny, long-time Shelter manager, who handles the day-to-day operations. This includes everything from animal adoption procedures, to working with the veterinarians overseeing animal health, working with volunteers and answering their questions about Shelter procedures, to overseeing daily medical checks on the animals, and working with the animal control officers.

Talking about issues and objectives a little further down the road, Gilliland commented that he's "taking a look at several areas to help the Shelter operate more efficiently both for residents and for the City. We're looking at our current fee structure to see if it's appropriate, and we want to improve our licensing compliance. I'd also like to see more interactivity on our website. It would be great if prospective volunteers could find out more and sign up via our website. I'd also like to be more responsive to community needs and want to take a look at how to do that. For example, Dana Point has an issue with animals (dogs) on its beaches. While that's currently not in our jurisdiction, I'd like to see how the Shelter might be of some help there."

Gilliland, who has been an animal lover his whole life, says that he realizes there are many staffers and volunteers who have as much or more experience with animals than he does. "I worked a lot with the K-9 dogs and the equestrian unit, but I try to do ongoing research on animals. I haven't spent as much time with them as some of our volunteers have. That's why I appreciate and respect their advice."

Gilliland and his wife, Tammy, live in Brea with their Beagle, Maggie, and their Siamese mix cat, Dusty.

A Tribute To Popsy MacDonald

By Cindi Kane

One of the best things about working/volunteering at the shelter is that you meet so many like-minded people. Such is the case with Popsy MacDonald. As I say this, in my heart I am grieving for the loss of one of the true strong souls of this world; Popsy MacDonald, who is now tending to the animals on the 'other' side after passing away in January.

Popsy, a long-time cat volunteer, was always there for the animals. Both feisty and forthright, she never held back her feelings and opinions. Never doubting herself, this perfect little sprite taught everyone she met to believe in themselves. She was more than a cat person, she was guardian to a dog and two cats.

Popsy's memorial drew people from all the times in her life; other volunteer groups, neighbors from past neighborhoods, and present neighbors. A brother came from Belgium to attend her memorial. As bagpipes played, she was remembered as a cool breeze of reason and fun. Popsy would not want us to cry over her illness or death, but instead celebrate her life.

Another Success Story For The Wag-A-Thon

By Ruth Rosen

Under cloudy skies and cool weather the 12th annual Wag-a-Thon was held in beautiful Dana Point Harbor. Thousands of people with one, two or even more dogs in tow paraded, visited the bazaar, ate snacks, hot dogs, drank water and thoroughly enjoyed the event. The day was filled with contests, entertainment and lots of socializing between humans and dogs. The many dogs in a variety of sizes from miniature to large, pranced, sniffed and downed doggie cookies being given away.

Pet Project Foundation, sponsor of this event, wishes to thank the many sponsors, donors and volunteers without whom this event could not have happened. Look for more information on our sponsors and donors in our next newsletter.

The proceeds from this event will be used to feed, medically treat and shelter not only dogs but cats, rabbits and the occasional iguana, rat, etc. that comes to the shelter. To learn more about us, visit our web site: at www.petprojectfoundation.org.

Ebb And Flow Of Shelter Animal Population

By Valerie Treaster

There is a natural ebb and flow to the animal population at the shelter. The kennels are not always full to capacity, kitten season comes and goes and we always hope the Easter bunny doesn't bring more, well, bunnies. When the weather is bad, as it has been this winter, the stray dog population swells and we struggle to staff enough volunteers to walk, train and comfort our animals.

Then there is the unexpected. After a year of investigative work, ACO Jill Moran busted a puppy mill operating out of a house in Dana Point. Thirty eight Pomarian puppies, ages 5 weeks to 5 months, were rescued and brought to the San Clemente/ Dana Point Animal Shelter. It became clear we would be unable to care for the puppies at our already cramped shelter, so we enlisted the help of Dr. Bob Stone and Dr. Tom Saunders at the Talega Animal Hospital. The puppies were all suffering from some type of illness and had to be treated and cared for before adoption.

The PPF volunteer force was stretched thin at the shelter, but once again, the awesome volunteer force went the extra mile. PPF volunteers covered three shifts a day. Cages were cleaned spotless every day, puppies were fed a special diet and time was spent socializing and giving each puppy needed human contact.

After two weeks of special one-on-one care, the puppies were spayed and neutered, and found loving homes with the help of over 700 people who filled out applications hoping to adopt one of these special puppies. The Pet Project Foundation funded the time spent at Talega Animal Hospital and the spay/neuter costs, with the help of a very generous Dr. Stone and Dr. Saunders.

Your ongoing contributions to the animals allow us the luxury of handling a crisis situation such as this, as well as maintain the high quality of care in the daily life of the shelter animals. Thank you for your kindness and please keep us in your thoughts.

Animal Lovers – Leave A Legacy To Your Shelter Animals

By Ruth Rosen

Pet Project Foundation (PPF) needs the financial support of charitable animal lovers in order to maintain the San Clemente-Dana Point Animal Shelter as a humane shelter.

You can show your care through a bequest in your will or by establishing another giving vehicle, such as a charitable remainder trust, naming Pet Project Foundation as the beneficiary. By doing this you are helping to protect and care for the many lost, abandoned and abused animals that come to the shelter. If necessary, discuss this with your financial advisor or estate attorney for the proper way to establish a legacy for the animals.

PPF funds are used to provide food, medical care, spay and neuter of all shelter animals and financial support of kennel attendants. Many dedicated PPF volunteers willingly give their time to care for these cats, rabbits and dogs at the shelter until a good home can be found for them. The volunteers also work diligently raising funds to keep these programs going. Please help us help the animals by remembering them in your legacy. Please think of PPF when creating your will and living trust.
